

MARGATE

IS a sea-port town, seventy-two miles east by south of London, fourteen miles north of Deal, and seventeen from Canterbury. It is situated at the northern extremity of the Isle of Thanet, and is a member of the port of Dover. Not many years since it was an unimportant fishing-town, but latterly it has rapidly risen to its present celebrity, as a fashionable sea-bathing place. The waters are limpid, the shore level, and the air very salubrious. In 1821, the number of visitors, during the high season, was estimated at above 60,000. The present buildings are found insufficient for this vast influx of persons, new ones are therefore erecting, and the town is still rising higher in importance. The new pier, the plan of the late Mr. Rennie, built of Whitby stone, is 901 feet long, 60 feet wide in the broadest part, and 26 feet high, with a parapet of four feet six inches. The promenade, and fashionable evening lounge of the summer visitants, is 856 feet long and 18 feet wide, elevated seven feet and a half above the level of the pier, over it are canvass awnings, a band of music attends, and the whole is brilliantly illuminated with gas. From the difficulty found in landing passengers from the steam boats, at low water, a wooden pier was erected in 1824, which is carried 1,062 feet into the sea, it is 18 feet wide, and well adapted to the purpose of its erection; it is called Jarvis's landing place, in compliment to Mr. Jarvis, a resident gentleman of Margate, at whose suggestion it was projected. The parish church, situated on a hill, was built about the year 1050, and is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, it was made parochial about the year 1220, and is a commodious building of flint, (roughcast.)— From the great population, during the summer months, and the increase of actual residents, the old church has been found too small, and much to the credit of the inhabitants, a new one is now building, which promises to become a great ornament to the town. The site is well chosen, and the situation commanding. The order of architecture is Gothic: the architect is Mr. Wm. Edmunds. The length of the church is 143 feet, its breadth 71, and the height of the tower 130 feet. Towards erecting this edifice the commissioners for building churches gave £10,000, the pier joint stock company £2,000, the parish, by rates, £6,000, and £8,000. was raised by voluntary subscription, to complete the sum of £26,000. the estimate cost. The organ, the velvet draperies, and the communion plate, are the gifts of some highly respectable individuals. Here are also two chapels for dissenters, one for baptists, and Roman catholics, and a friend's meeting-house. Margate can boast of several charitable establishments; the national school gratuitously educates 230 boys and 170 girls. The royal sea-bathing infirmary, at Westbrook, established under the patronage of his present Majesty, is well deserving of commendation ; a new wing has lately been added, for the better accommodation of female patients, and it now stands a monument of the liberality of Thanet Isle. The new market was planned in 1820, over which is the town-hall, of the Tuscan order, supported by cast iron pillars; the market is entered by porticos, and closed by iron gates: the whole is executed with a design to neatness and utility. The assembly-rooms, theatre and museum, are all worthy of being visited by the stranger; the several reading rooms are well conducted and supplied; the libraries and baths possess every convenience and comfort that can attach to such establishments. A considerable quantity of corn is exported from hence to London every week by hoys. Steam packets also go daily to London during the season. Well supplied markets are held on Wednesday and Saturday ; and the population is now near 10,000.

POST OFFICE, High-st.—Daniel Valder, Post Master. The London, Canterbury and Sandwich mail arrives at seven in the morning, and is dispatched at half-past six in the evening. Ramsgate by-mail arrives at nine in the morning, and dispatched at half-past four in the afternoon.
